552 receive degrees; Judd challenges students

Five hundred fifty-two Loma Linda University students received degrees at the annual spring commencement ceremonies held in the stadium at the University of California at Riverside last Sunday.

Walter H. Judd, MD, former congressman from Minnesota and now editor of the Washington Report radio program challenged the graduates to "be motivated by strength and depth of your faith. The need for strength and depth in your generation is even greater than for mine."

"For we are being challenged on two fronts. One, a cold, calculated attack from the outside, directed largely from Moscow, and the other an even colder indifference and rejection of our basic ideals from within."

An estimated 7,000 persons sat in and around the university's stadium area, as Dr. Judd delivered a fiery address, attacking the Communist threat of world domination.

"People say that communism has changed its goals, but don't you believe it. Just show me one communist leader who has rejected the goal of world communism."

Dr. Judd drew applause from the audience when he said "if we've got 20 percent unemployed in the country, let's look at the 80 percent who are employed, see why they are employed, and see what we can do to make sure they stay employed, so that the 80 percent can help the 20 percent."

"As I say to my liberal friends, I'm a conservative because I want to be in a position to be liberal."

In his address, Dr. Judd advocated that educators pay more attention to what he termed "the heart" of man.

"I think that we must pay more attention to the desires of youth, for power comes not from ideas, but from the generating of emotional enthusiasm to carry out those ideas."

"It may have been regarded as sophomoric for some time now to believe in a cause with one's whole mind, and one's whole heart. Perhaps the civil disobedience we've seen among our youth lately is a sign of rejection of that idea. But let's channel that enthusiasm into worthwhile objectives."

The Sunday commencement exercise was the University's first to be held on the UCR campus. Previous commencement exercises have been held at the Redlands Bowl, Redlands.

Sunday's ceremony was the third in the traditional triad of commencement exercises. The vesper service was held Friday evening on the University's Riverside campus, with Harold

OVER 550 LOMA LINDA UNIVERSITY students received diplomas at the annual spring commencement ceremony last Sunday. An estimated 7,000 guests attended the graduation services held in the Stadium at University of California at Riverside.

Kidney transplant patient builds new life

Paul Anderson leaned over to turn down the stereo set he just finished building from a kit.

"No, I'm not working right now," he said, straightening up. "But the gas company has told me I'm in line for an office opening very soon. I sure hope they hurry — I'm awfully tired of staying at home."

Not that the home at 4003 Lindsey Place, Pico Rivera, is a bad place, understand. It's comfortable, and roomy enough for the two adult Andersons and the four of their five children still living with their parents.

There's a new game table in the den, built by the 37-year-old father during his absence from the job. The back lawn is strikingly green after he reseeded it several weeks ago, and the front yard also reflects the digging, planting, mowing, and trimming that have kept the former gas company crew foreman busy at home.

Nothing about the appearance of the suntanned, trimly built Anderson suggests that he is alive thanks only to a medical miracle, but he talks freely of his experience.

First transplant

"It was a year ago this week that I became the first person to have a kidney transplant at Loma Linda University Hospital," he recalls. "That was when they still had the old hospital at Loma Linda, instead of the big new one that opened last summer."

"I had been in the hospital for just over three months, undergoing continual hemodialysis (a blood purification procedure performed by the so-called kidney machine). That was all that kept me alive while my doctors, all research men on the School of Medicine faculty at Loma Linda, tried to find a suitable donor kidney to transplant."

"The long wait was terribly tiresome for me, and the bills were mounting up every day."

Finally, Anderson himself read in the newspaper of a fire victim who was not expected to survive burn injuries at a hospital in Riverside, about 15 miles southwest of Loma Linda.

Could his doctors learn if that patient's kidney would be available if and when he died, Anderson asked a nurse.

They did, but were told the fire victim's kidneys were damaged and could not be used. Later the same day, however, a surgeon at Riverside General Hospital - University Medical Center called back.

"I think we have a kidney you can use," he reported. This time the Riverside patient was the victim of a traffic accident, injured beyond hope of survival but with his kidneys apparently undamaged. Blood types and similar tests indicated a suitable match with Anderson.

Family agrees

The family of the dying man, Virgil R. Hurst, 49, of Riverside, agreed to the procedure, and the Riverside hospital surgeons who are also members of the Loma Linda University medical faculty, removed one of his kidneys about an hour and a half after his death the following Sunday afternoon.

Surgeons at Loma Linda were simultaneously preparing

Paul Anderson to receive the organ, which was rushed between hospitals by the California Highway Patrol at 100-mile-an-hour speeds. An hour and ten minutes elapsed between removal of the organ in Riverside and completion of the transplant procedure at Loma Linda.

"I had to stay in the hospital for a month after the operation, while the most crucial rejection period passed and a second operation related to the transplant was performed. Once I got home, everything was pretty normal. I do about anything I want, and there are no special diets or anything," Anderson says.

The doctors did say, however, that he should not resume the heavy physical work of his earlier job with the gas company. He takes a combination of drugs in pill form every day and visits his doctor for routine laboratory tests twice a month.

"Most people that ask me about the kidney transplant have inaccurate ideas," he observes. "Some think I have an artificial kidney, made out of some kind of plastic. Many also believe a person is set up for the rest of his life once he gets a transplanted kidney, which isn't so either."

Anderson has been told the survival expectancy for a successful transplant is usually three or four years, perhaps longer. At that time, it may be necessary to repeat the whole procedure unless research has turned up other ways of doing the kidney's work.

The bill for months of costly treatment, the two operations he underwent for the transplant, and a third surgery also performed while he was in the hospital reached about $19,000, Anderson says. "But I've never seen it — my hospital insurance and Medi-Cal took care of most of the expenses," he explains.

An opinion about the procedure a year later? Anderson doesn't hesitate.

"I'd be dead except for the transplant, and instead I'm alive. Any time medical science can save someone's life it's a good thing."

Choice '68

Recently many students of Seventh-day Adventist colleges and universities throughout the United States participated in the Choice '68 National Collegiate Presidential Primary sponsored as a public service program by the UNIVAC division of Sperry Rand in cooperation with Time magazine.

The last issue of University SCOPE reported the results of the primary from the La Sierra campus of Loma Linda University. The College of Arts and Sciences students along with students from other Seventh-day Adventists campuses overwhelmingly picked Richard M. Nixon, the former vice president and one-time candidate for governor of California, and a "hawk" on the Vietnam situation over Senator (D-Minnesota) Eugene J. McCarthy, a "dove," who was picked as the best choice for president by the over one million students from 1,200 colleges who participated in "Choice '68."

Forty-three percent of the Loma Linda University students participating in the primary indicated that they desire an intensification of the bombing of North Vietnam; 10 percent favored the use of nuclear weapons; and 16 percent favored a total withdrawal from Vietnam.

The results from other Seventh-day Adventist campuses across the nation line up with their California sister college. A plurality of Andrews University, Berrien Springs, Michigan, students voted to intensify the bombing (37 percent); five percent suggested the use of nuclear weapons; and 17 percent voted for a total withdrawal from Vietnam.

Other campus results available include Atlantic Union College, South Lancaster, Massachusetts. Thirty-three percent of the Massachusetts students voted to intensify the bombing; seven percent favored the use of nuclear weapons; and 29 percent chose permanent cessation of the bombing of North Vietnam.

Walla Walla College, College Place, Washington, students voted by 31 percent for an all-out military effort to win the war in Vietnam; 20 percent favored a withdrawal; 25 percent suggested a cessation of the bombing; and only four percent (the same as the national percentage) advocated the use of nuclear weapons.

While the majority of Southern Missionary College, Collegedale, Tennessee, students chose Mr. Nixon as their choice for president, they voted for George C. Wallace, the former governor of Alabama, as their second choice. No results are available on their attitudes toward Vietnam.

The results of "Choice '68" in the Adventist colleges pose many interesting questions. Traditionally, Seventh-day Adventists have been opposed to war. Today, the majority of Seventh-day Adventist young men drafted into the U.S. Army choose to be classified 1-A-O (conscientious objector available for noncombatant military service only).

Why is it that now the plurality of those Seventh-day Adventist young men and women who voted favored an intensification of the war in some form or another? Does this mean that they would be willing to become personally involved in the fighting? Are many Adventist young people re-examining their traditional stand against participating in war in a combatant form? Is this generation of Seventh-day Adventists forgetting the Biblical lessons and admonitions, "love your enemies," and "thou shalt not kill?"

Or is theirs just a subliminal hostility? Chances are, that when the real "Choice '68" comes along, these same men and women will not ignore their Biblical foundations.

Letters

To the Editor

Choice '68

The interesting data in the editorial "Choice '68" (May 22 issue) confirmed first-hand observations of attitudes at La Sierra College during my tenure there. It is good to have actual figures at hand.

There is a paradox involved in these figures which I am unable to resolve, and which might be discussed in the pages of your journal. The overwhelming support of Richard Nixon, a "hawk" candidate, and the large plurality (43 percent) favoring intensification of the bombing in Vietnam are entirely inconsistent with the traditional Seventh-day Adventist position on noncombatancy.

It is utterly astonishing that a campus of young people who generally support the conscientious objector position could be so much more hawkish than college students nationally.

It would seem that some community self-examination is necessary to resolve this contradiction.

Dear Editor:

I read your editorial yesterday regarding the campus elections and was appalled at what I found. Long ago I read a Book which admonished me not to kill and to love my enemies. Is everybody still reading the same Book, or have they issued a new edition?

Brahms' 'Requiem' to be presented by Oratorio Singers

The beautiful classic Brahms Requiem will be presented in concert by the Oratorio Singers under the direction of Oliver S. Beltz, Saturday afternoon, June 8, in Burden Hall.

Mr. Schryock served from 1904 to 1908.

Former students, friends, and acquaintances of Professor Schryock are cordially invited to the concert and to a brief reception after the concert, according to Dr. Beltz. The general public is also invited to the concert.

Professor Schryock plans to be in attendance at both the concert and the reception.

Alpha Omega Alpha initiates students

Fourteen Loma Linda University students, three alumni, and one faculty member, all from the School of Medicine, were initiated into Alpha Omega Alpha, the national honor medical society, during the annual dinner meeting of the local Epsilon chapter last month.

The meeting, held at the Redlands Country Club, Redlands, was presided over by Dale M. Isaef, SM'65, president of the chapter. He presented keys and certificates to the 18 initiates and introduced the new officers for the 1968-69 year.

New initiates include Floyd N. Andersen, Earl D. DeWitt, Craig L. Gray, Harvey L. Heinrichs, Edward C. Jacobs, J. Michael Nelson, Frederick L. Orr, Vernon J. Peterson, Kenneth L. Raessler, Elwyn L. Rexinger, and Siegmund Teichman, all of the class of 1968.

Others initiated at the meeting included Keith E. George, William C. Patton, and Arden F. Reynolds, Jr., class of 1969. Alumni initiated were Clarence R. Collier, '49, Leo P. Krall, '43; and Ralph J. Thomson, Jr., '51. W. Philip Corr, clinical professor of medicine and a member of the School of Medicine faculty since 1932, was elected to membership.

W. Donovan Schutt, associate general manager, Reentry Systems Division, Aerospace Corporation, San Bernardino, gave the evening's address entitled, "Rockets and Missions."

The Requiem is to be presented in honor of Buren R. Schryock, who was the first music director in the history of Union College, Lincoln, Nebraska. He

Psychology and the Christian Religion

by David P. Duffie, MD

(Published by Southern Publishing Association, 1968.)

Reviewed by Keith S. Clouten, Librarian of Avondale College, Cooranbong, New South Wales, Australia

For a long time, psychology has lived under a cloud of uncertainty in Adventist circles. Nor is the uncertainty restricted to the Adventist community, for by its very nature the study of the human mind invades the sphere of Christian theology. The relationship between psychology and Christianity has been the subject of a multitude of books in modern times; now comes a book setting forth the distinctive Adventist position on this issue. Psychology and the Christian Religion by David Duffie, MD, is a serious and valuable contribution to the problems of psychology. Unfortunately, the book tells nothing of the author's qualifications and experience, but from other sources, we learn that he graduated from the School of Medicine of Loma Linda University in 1945, and is currently serving on the medical staff of the Bella Vista Hospital in Puerto Rico.

Vital topics

Duffie's book is understandable to the layman, and considers a number of topics vital to Christians. The main disagreements between secular psychotherapy and traditional Christianity, the questions of psychoanalysis, spiritualism, and mental healing; these are four of the topics he discusses.

Considering psychotherapy in the light of Bible teaching, Duffie prefaces his discussion with the statement that "there is much in secular psychotherapy which is both true and profoundly relevant to the work of the Christian ministry. Valid wisdom from secular sources can supplement the principles of true psychology found in the Bible and in the writings of Ellen G. White." From this stand, the author proceeds to demonstrate the deep and unresolvable conflicts over basic issues, such as the basis of truth, and the diagnosis and treatment of man's mental ills. "These differences are not only very deep, but they are also very widespread. On the deepest level they underlie the entire world of science, on that level where the Christian is obliged to challenge one of the basic assumptions of the scientific spirit, namely, that man's reason and experiences are the ultimate ground and test of the truth... Natural man, unenlightened by the Spirit of God, cannot be depended upon to read nature aright whether it be in the realm of natural history or in the study of human nature and the behavioral sciences. For this reason there will always be disagreements and areas of conflict between the psychological sciences and the Christian religion." In this and many similar statements, Duffie is careful to distinguish "traditional" or "genuine" Christianity from modern "religious liberalism" which does succeed in reaching substantial agreement with the man-centered approach of psychology.

Modern revival

In a chapter titled "The Modern Revival of the Confessional," the author draws comparisons between three phenomena: the Roman Catholic confessional, Protestant forms of pastoral counseling, and secular psychoanalysis. Discussing psychoanalysis as a form of therapy, he indicates how the patient undergoing this therapy experiences "a tremendous sense of relief, of release from guilt feeling." The psychiatrist, of course, attempts to distinguish between what he believes to be neurotic guilt and real guilt. But, "regardless of the therapist's view as to whether real guilt is involved, the relief to the patient from adequate ventilation and catharsis is real. It is one of the fundamental elements of the psychotherapeutic situation."

Alumni News

Cordelia P. Reynolds, '24, writes from 465 Burmah Road, Penang, Malaysia: "There was quite a stack of mail awaiting me when I arrived and it was wonderful. Left Poona via BOAC to Singapore; the scenery was absolutely breathtaking. When my plane landed in Penang and taxied to the air terminal, I saw a crowd of people and a big white sign welcoming someone. When I got within seeing distance I read, 'Welcome Mrs. Reynolds to the Penang Sanitarium and Hospital.' The Samuel Ketterings', both physicians, met me and took me to the hospital. Everywhere there were bouquets of flowers with signs, 'Welcome Mrs. Reynolds.' The climate here is a steam bath. I am up to my neck in work."

Our sympathy to Vesta Hudson Burden, '25, in the recent loss of her husband, Harold G. Burden, SM'24. After a long illness, Dr. Burden died April 8 at the St. Helena Sanitarium and Hospital, Sanitarium. He had served as a member of the medical staffs in Sidney, British Columbia, Canada; Walla Walla, Washington; and Denver, Colorado. Twelve years before his retirement he had practiced medicine in Napa.

Carl F. Courser, '13, died at the Little Paradise rest home located near Rest Haven Hospital, Sidney, British Columbia, May 4. Our sympathy to his wife Amy Kelsey Courser also of the class of 1913 and the nine remaining classmates. Twelve members preceded Carl in death. Mr. and Mrs. Courser joined the Rest Haven Hospital staff when the institution opened in 1921. Mr. Courser served many years as nurse, later became gardner, and was in charge of the boiler room. He was a member of the Rest Haven board of directors.

Bessie B. S. Wat, '40, GS'59, exchanged marriage vows with George Ching on May 5 at the University Church, Loma Linda. Bessie has served her alma mater for nearly 25 years, part of the time as head nurse in the operating room, as instructor, assistant director of nursing service, and in inservice education.

God in the secrecy of the inner room? The answer is that it would be sufficient if he felt forgiven by this process. But, for most, God is so unreal that man feels he has been talking when no one was listening. Nothing happens. The catharsis is not effected. But the dramatic nature of telling another human being is so costly that it is far more likely to bring that feeling of penitence and that feeling of forgiveness essential to such a catharsis." Dr. Duffie does not dispute the need for the pastor to have an "ear that can listen with sympathy" to those who come to him for counsel, but, he says, there is an ever-present danger "that a human confessor or mediator will thereby become interposed between the soul and God."

Positive approach

In the last section of his book, Duffie takes a positive approach and emphasizes the power which genuine Christianity can exert in the field of mental healing. "The Christian view is that psychopathology is universal in the heart of man. It is not something that affects only normal people. In the Christian view all men are hopelessly entangled in the meshes of selfishness and sinfulness . . . The Christian dynamics assays to counteract this universal psychopathology in the heart of man by the love of God . . . The Bible likens this process to the dying of the "old man" of sin and the coming to birth of a new creature begotten by the Holy Spirit. This miracle of the new birth is that mystery of godliness which cannot be scientifically explained as the mere operation of psychological laws or natural forces."

The author also devotes a chapter to the positive contributions which psychology can make to the work of the Christian pastor. There is need, for example, for the pastor to be able to recognize the symptoms of serious mental disturbances, and to know when a qualified psychiatrist should be consulted. "Just as it is no denial of the power of God to call upon a physician to treat a physical disease, so also is it no denial of that power to call upon a psychiatrist to ameliorate the physical concomitants of mental disease." In return, the psychiatrist can learn much from the religionist concerning the nature of man's mental disease and its treatment. He needs a dynamic practical theology. "By being aware of, and participating in, this larger reality of the spiritual world, the psychiatrist can join hands with the gospel worker in the common task and privilege of ministering to the real needs of the whole of man."

Dental Hygiene Class of 1969

Kathleen E. Hartwell, president; Pamela J. Neubury, vice president; Sherry Thierfelder, secretary-treasurer; Candice L. Young, social activities director; Margaret A. Davis, chaplain; and Arva D. Eckerman, public relations.

La Sierra students take first place in temperance meet

Thomas A. Peterson, junior art major, won first place in the national poster contest sponsored by Action Unit for Better Living, a national temperance organization.

A cash award was presented to Mr. Peterson by Robert H. Pierson, president of the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, at the last chapel exercise of the semester on the Riverside campus of the University.

First place winner in the La Sierra temperance speech contest was awarded to Daniel S. Welebir, senior theology major. Mr. Welebir recently won third place in California state temperance contest in competition with other non-Seventh-day Adventist universities. The contest was held in Los Angeles. The title of his talk was "Russian Roulette."

Includes four-county area

New organization formed

Leaders of a broadly based organization originated to study and improve medical services in a four-county California area last week announced completion of the first phase of their federally sponsored program.

Ivan Hinderaker, PhD, chancellor at the University of California at Riverside, told a news conference in Loma Linda that local organization of the Regional Medical Program is virtually completed and preliminary studies are under way.

Dr. Hinderaker, chairman of a 29-member advisory committee, described the program as "a very serious effort to draw together community resources to find cooperative relationships that can best serve the health needs of the people." He said the program seeks particularly to combat three major health problems — heart disease, cancer, and stroke — as well as related ailments.

Local program

The local program, one of eight in as many California areas, serves the counties of San Bernardino, Riverside, Inyo, and Mono. Study and planning services will also be extended to neighboring Clark County, Nevada, officials said.

John E. Gorrell, director of the professional services at Riverside General Hospital, Riverside, and chairman of the organization's planning committee, cited a major reason for the development of the national program.

"It's clear that not everyone in the population is getting quality health care. People in the health professions are in short supply, with their numbers increasing only slowly.

"The Regional Medical Programs represent an effort to distribute the available service fairly to all."

Principal California health agencies, medical agencies, and medical schools have joined to administer the statewide regional program, supported by a $3 million federal appropriation. Formation of eight "area" programs within the state, including the local area six, help to ensure grassroots planning and participation, according to area six coordinator, John E. Peterson, MD, associate dean for research affairs in the School of Medicine.

Staff members

Only Dr. Peterson, a part-time staff member, and full-time executive director Wilton Senecal are paid by the agency for their work on its behalf. Members of the policymaking advisory committee headed by Dr. Hindertaker and of the other newly organized committees serve without pay.

Organized to support the advisory committee are four permanent professional committees, charged with making studies and recommendations in regard to planning, heart disease, cancer, and stroke.

Chairmen, in addition to Dr. Gorrell, are Pierce J. Flynn, MD, of San Bernardino, for heart disease; Clark D. Fobes, MD, Redlands, for cancer; and Roger A. Smith, MD, San Bernardino, for stroke. Members of the advisory committee and the other committees were selected by professional qualifications and on the basis of geographic distribution through the area served, Dr. Hinderaker said.

The time consuming work of getting the organization set up in its early stage has been the major project of area six. However, the four specialized committees have under study specific recommendations for studies and cooperative programs to be undertaken, reporters were told.

Of the $3 million allocated to California in the federal program, $118,000 is available for approved initial studies and programs in area six, Mr. Senecal reported. The funds can be made available from a federal account as their use can be justified in programs voted by the advisory committee.

Members of the advisory panel, which shares administrative responsibility for the area six program with the School of Medicine, include 19 representatives of health agencies or medical organizations and 10 non-agency members chosen from the general public.

Organizations represented on the committee include county medical societies, hospital administrators, county health departments, voluntary agencies such as cancer and heart associations, and the professional organizations for nurses and dentists. Spokesmen at the news conference stressed the program's effort to meet health needs "from the people up, rather than from Congress down."

Hospital dietary service chosen as one of world's finest

Loma Linda University Hospital dietary service was chosen one of the world's finest food service operations in Institutions Magazine's 22nd annual awards program for 1968.

Institutions Magazine, the leading business publication in the food service and lodging industry, sponsors the annual awards program to recognize superlative achievement in food service and interior design. Restaurants, hotels, motels, hospitals, clubs, schools, colleges, and universities participate in the competition.

Lydia M. Sonnenberg, director of dietary services, accepted the award for University Hospital at a presentation dinner honoring the winners held last month in Chicago.

Thirty-eight winning institutions were chosen from a field of 180 total entries.

Prominent physician lectures to SAMA

Internationally known pathologist Herwig Hamperl, MD, recently visited Loma Linda University and lectured to the members of the Loma Linda chapter of the Student American Medical Association.

The author of over 110 scientific papers and a textbook in pathology, Dr. Hamperl is also noted for his role in international medical education and research.

Dr. Hamperl spoke to the Loma Linda students on "Oncocytoma," which is a distinctive tumor usually arising in the parotid gland.
